Development is following swiftly the steel ties that will bind an isolated inland country with the outside world. Mojave already is a bustling center of activity, and from there prospectors are turning their attention to the mineral wealth the desert traversed undoubtedly holds. Camps and towns are expected soon to spring up where now is nothing.

The world of wealth and treasure that is lying directly beneath the city of Tonopah is of such an extent that it seems almost incredible and beyond belief.

The history of all the great mines of the world will be repeated and then may exceed the richest the world has ever produced.

In heretofore unprospected territory and in a direction which many mining experts had given their opinion as altogether likely to prove barren, has been uncovered one of the richest and greatest ore bodies that this or any other district has ever seen.

A visit to the West End last evening was made on invitation of William Douglas, who with Foreman Bob Christian, Neil McLain and C. C. Burns, accompanied by Bonanza representatives, descended to the 400-foot level, the scene of the recent great strikes.

Stepping from the cage one is immediately ushered into a vast chamber of ore, the extent of which is not known, though that presented to the eye is twenty feet in height by over twelve feet in width and no walls yet encountered. As to the value of it the ore will run from $200 to $300 per ton and pitted samples show almost pure silver. Thirty feet to the south is a drift the face of which is all in ore. They are now raising in an endeavor to discover the extent of the ledge.

The vein is pointing directly toward Mt. Brougher, through the Ohio Tonopah ground, which is now the property of the West End company.

The shipments sent out from the mine during the past week were 250 tons, the heaviest in the history of
